OBAMA SAYS US MULLING ALTERNATE ROUTES FOR N. DAKOTA PIPELINE

President Barack Obama said the U.S. government is examining ways to reroute an oil pipeline in North Dakota as it addresses concerns raised by Native American tribes protesting against its construction. Obama's comments late on Tuesday to online news site Now This were his first to directly address the escalating clashes between local authorities and protesters over Energy Transfer Partners' $3.8 billion Dakota Access pipeline project. "My view is that there is a way for us to accommodate sacred lands of Native Americans. And I think that right now the Army Corps is examining whether there are ways to reroute this pipeline," Obama said in the video interview. REUTERS

MISSISSIPPI CHURCH BURNED, VANDALIZED WITH 'VOTE TRUMP'

A black church in Mississippi was burned and spray-painted with "Vote Trump," officials said on Wednesday, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation said it was looking into the incident, which comes one week before the U.S. presidential election. No one was injured in the Tuesday evening blaze at Hopewell M.B. Church in Greenville, and the cause of the fire has not been determined, Greenville Fire Chief Ruben Brown Sr. said in a telephone interview. Black churches in the U.S. South have long been a base of support for the Democratic Party. The town of about 33,000 people is about 100 miles northwest of Jackson. "The FBI Jackson Division is aware of the situation in Greenville, and we are working with our local, state and federal law enforcement partners to determine if any civil rights crimes were committed," the agency said in a statement. Brown said the church was heavily damaged by the fire. REUTERS

GAWKER SETTLES WITH EX-PRO WRESTLER HULK HOGAN FOR $31M

Shuttered irreverent news website Gawker Media LLC has reached a $31 million cash settlement with Hulk Hogan, the former professional wrestler who won a $140 million judgment against the site over a leaked sex tape. Hogan's judgment forced Gawker, known for its sassy tone and gossipy posts, into bankruptcy in June. Its sister websites, including sports site Deadspin and women's site Jezebel, were acquired for $135 million by media company Univision Holdings Inc in a bankruptcy auction last summer. "As with any negotiation for resolution, all parties have agreed it is time to move on," said Hogan's attorney, David Houston. The settlement is subject to approval by a bankruptcy judge. Silicon Valley billionaire Peter Thiel said in May he helped fund the invasion of the privacy lawsuit filed by Hogan, whose real name is Terry Bollea. REUTERS

Election 2016 is a minefield in the classroom, teachers tell Metro

In a recent survey, 40 percent of the teachers who participated reported hesitance to teach about this election.

AMANDA MIKELBERG
@MetroNewYork
amanda.mikelberg@metro.us

Nearly a year ago, when Donald Trump was still trying to curry favor with the GOP establishment, he made a gesture of interest in education.

"Nothing [is] more important than higher education and education in general," he said on Nov. 11, 2015. Yet in the following year, the young, impressionable minds of America seemed to be the least of his concerns.

After winning the Nevada primary in February, Trump even told the raucous crowd, "I love the poorly educated."

An election season once provided abundant teaching moments and gateways into academic topics, but the current presidential race has posed an unusual assortment of challenges, say teachers from several states.

As media coverage has been swamped with reports of candidate misbehavior — whether it's emails or sexual misconduct — and strikes at racial and ethnic sensitivities, teaching this election is a minefield for educators.

"They see the candidates acting more like high school kids, not like adults. They're like, 'Hey wait a minute, I get in trouble for that, why don't they?'" Michael J. Maguire of the Boston Latin Academy told Metro.

I don't bring [the election] up because I have my opinion and they have theirs and that's not my job to impart that, but when it comes up, because it does, we talk about Roman politics, Greek politics, and the kids say, 'Oh, it's like when, fill in the blanks for what a candidate did,'" said Maguire, who teaches 9th and 12th grade Latin.

In a Teaching Tolerance survey of 2,000 teachers, 40 percent reported hesitance to teach about this election. The study found that two thirds of immigrants and Muslim students expressed to their teachers concerns about what might happen to them or their families after the election; more than one-third of teachers observed an increase in anti-Muslim or anti-immigrant sentiment, and more than half have seen an increase in "uncivil political discourse," a phenomenon the study termed "the Trump effect."

"Now it's even hard to talk about the election. 'Did you hear what Trump said?' You're almost afraid to address it," Alan Malachowski, an elementary school teacher in Lansdale, Pennsylvania, told Metro.

"We spend a lot of time with bully prevention, helping students to recognize it, what does it look like, how do you handle it when you see it," he said, adding that the North Penn School District has been dedicated to a 10-year anti-bullying campaign. "Those rules are going out the window in our public discourse, the way the candidates speak to each other."

Frequently, teachers are forced to undo the damage and correct the misinformation they are getting from all angles.

"Our kids tend to believe everything they hear and read, and it isn't always from news. They are still getting their news from YouTube and Facebook, and take it for face value," said Joshua W., who teaches at a charter high school in New York.

"I spend a lot of time debunking myths."

As for positive role models, neither Trump nor Clinton are measuring up to Barack Obama, said Alexander Paolano, an 11th grade history teacher at New Castle County Vocational Technical School outside Wilmington, Delaware.

"It's not just Donald Trump. It's both of them," said Paolano, who is a lifelong Republican. "Barack Obama to them was so inspiring. And now they're stuck with this. There's a letdown now for a lot of them."

Sam Newhouse, Kristin Toussaint and Kimberly Aquilina contributed to this report.

Professors to get 'microaggression' training

A sociology professor accused a Latina student of plagiarism for using the word "hence."

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Suffolk University will conduct mandatory "microaggression" training for each academic department after an incident that recently gained attention in which a sociology student wrote a blog post saying she was wrongfully accused of plagiarism because of her race.

In her post titled "Academia, Love Me Back," Tiffany Martinez wrote that her professor marked her paper with the comment that "this is not your language" and asked her to indicate where she used "cut and paste." Specifically, the professor, who has not been named by Martinez or the university, circled the word "hence" in her paper, writing "this is not your word."

"My professor assumed someone like me would never use language like that," Martinez wrote. "As I stood in the front of the class while a professor challenged my intelligence I could just imagine them reading my paper in their home thinking, 'could someone like her write something like this?'"

Suffolk University Acting President Marisa J. Kelly said in a post on the school's website that the incident is being taken seriously and Suffolk is committed to making sure all students feel welcomed and respected.

"The truth is that all of us here at Suffolk should be concerned about any student feeling this way," Kelly wrote. "So we must redouble efforts to create a more inclusive environment, while at the same time recognizing that everyone involved in any specific incident deserves a fair hearing."

Kelly said that the school has been focusing this year on diversity and inclusion, with new staff hirings and a survey distributed to the Suffolk community asking about areas that need improvement. The survey will be analyzed by the school's Diversity Task Force.

Suffolk also opened workshops for faculty on topics like teaching inclusively and experiences of race in academia. Still, Kelly said, this isn't enough in light of the recent issue, and so the school will hold the microaggression training.

The term "microaggressions" was coined by a Harvard professor and psychiatrist and has come to refer to casual or sometimes unconsciously made degrading, racist or sexist remarks.

"While these sessions will not make us perfect, it is my hope that through training and open dialog we will further foster a climate that is safe, supportive, and welcoming to all," Kelly wrote.

Martinez has not responded to a request for comment or made any Facebook posts about Kelly's remarks. She did share a BBC World video in which she spoke with other Latina students who shared their own stories of being accused of plagiarism and voiced support for Martinez.

"The amount of support that I've been getting... I feel like I'm getting emotional because I felt fear going into my class tomorrow because I still have to see this professor," Martinez said. "But now I walk into this classroom with so many Latinas behind me and powerful strong women and powerful strong people who are on my side."

Northeastern student sues over handling of sexual assault

Suit alleges university downplays violent crimes.

ERIN TIERNAN
@MetroBOS
erin.tiernan@metro.us

A junior at Northeastern University is suing the school over its handling of a 2013 sexual assault and its treatment of victims.

Morgan Helfman, a political science and sociology major, filed the lawsuit in Suffolk County Superior Court on Monday. The suit accuses the university of mishandling the campus proceedings that found a fellow student not responsible for allegedly raping her, the Huntington News reported.

Helfman gave the student-run paper permission to use her name.

The suit also accuses Northeastern of not accurately reporting crimes and misrepresenting the extent of violent and sexual crimes at NU to students, prospective students and their parents.

The suit claims the university incorrectly classified some crimes as disciplinary violations, pushed victimized students to take leaves of absence to avoid addressing crimes, encouraged victimized students to transfer to other schools and discouraged victims from reporting crimes.

"[Northeastern has] an obligation to provide a safe environment. They have a responsibility to provide safe housing [and] safe premises and to protect against foreseeable experiences. Northeastern knows from experience running a university that there are dangers prevalent on college campuses, and the measures that were taken were inadequate," Mark Itzkowitz, Helfman's lawyer, told the Huntington News.

Northeastern University campus ISTOCK

The suit alleges Helfman was raped by a male acquaintance after consuming alcohol at a Halloween party. The man was supposed to escort Helfman back to her dormitory after she drank too much alcohol and got sick. Instead, he took her back to his room where she alleges he raped her over the course of several hours.

Helfman reported the assault on Nov. 2, 2013, to Northeastern University Police and filed a complaint with the Office of Student Conduct and Conflict Resolution.

A five-member student conduct board reportedly found the assailant "not responsible."

The university also allegedly refused to transfer the man out of classes they shared, or out of the dormitory.

The lawsuit also calls into question information from Northeastern's crime reports, which state there are two to 14 rapes per year. A December 2015 sexual assault campus climate survey, which was conducted by the Office of Student Affairs puts that number closer to 700.

City Council: More MBTA privatization could lead to discriminatory service

The council called on Gov. Charlie Baker to be transparent about privatization efforts.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Concerns about how more privatization efforts from the MBTA could lead to widespread discriminatory practices of transportation services prompted the Boston City Council on Wednesday to unanimously request a briefing from Gov. Charlie Baker's administration.

Residents have experienced multiple issues with Keolis Commuter Services, the private transportation company that runs the commuter rail, including frequently canceled trains. Beyond affecting how these riders get to work, school or home, they are also often redirected to trains that charge higher fares, which council members say is discriminatory.

"It seems that the Baker administration and the MBTA have turned deaf ears and blind eyes to the urgent demands and practical recommendations from consumers and readers," said Councilor Ayanna Pressley. "It's a social and economic justice issue, but it also perpetuates concentrations of poverty and segregation of neighborhoods."

Councilors pointed specifically to Baker as being responsible for these ongoing issues, saying that he continues to blame the wrong people for the transportation shortfalls. Community leaders are concerned about the look to privatize more aspects of the MBTA instead of focusing on investing in the transit system.

"The T is insolvent because folks in the past borrowed money on behalf of the T to move over to the Big Dig," Councilor Tito Jackson said. "We need the government to show leadership on this issue, not turn their back on the hardworking men and women who make this antiquated system work every day. Trains in [Dorchester and Mattapan] have to go to museums to get parts from circa World War II."

On the Fairmount line, which goes through Roxbury and Dorchester toward downtown, Keolis canceled at least 17 trains in October, according to The Boston Globe. Councilor Andrea Campbell said that this denial of service severely disrupts residents' lives.

"While we talk about privatization, which sometimes does work and sometimes not, we need to talk about the benefits and lack of benefits when it comes to the community," she said.

Council members commended the Boston Carmen's Union, who have been fighting against MBTA privatization efforts the past few months, for being on the front lines of this issue. Some union members attended the City Council meeting.

"There has been nothing transparent about the way MBTA leadership has pursued outsourcing," said James O'Brien, president of the Boston Carmen's Union, in a news release. "From the decision making, to the forgiven fines, to the secret hiring of private consultants — the MBTA continues to withhold information from the public, waiting to reveal full details until pushed for information by the media."

O'Brien said that the news of Keolis canceling trains on the Fairmount Line shows that a private company is not accountable to the public. The council wants to know if MBTA officials knew about Keolis' actions to redeploy trains away from city residents and also asks that other privatization efforts be temporarily halted until they can be sure more measures won't disproportionately harm public transit services for some residents.

"Businesses always have a business interest, we have to keep that in mind," said Councilor Frank Baker. "[But] service is more important than profit."

Mila Kunis talks sexism in Hollywood and the workplace

Mila Kunis has proven she has the chops of a multifaceted actress — whether she was comedically thriving on “That ‘70s Show” or “Family Guy” or bringing Oscar-worthy drama to “Black Swan.” But even with all of her success, she hasn’t been able to avoid the same sexism that so many women endure in every professional industry. The 33-year-old mother of one (soon to be two) penned an op-ed on husband Ashton Kutcher’s A Plus site where she recalled multiple experiences with gender bias — including pay gaps and other forms of discrimination. In one incident, Kunis was told that she would “never work in this town again” after refusing to pose semi-nude on the cover of a men’s magazine. She also calls out those who continue to reference her as Kutcher’s “baby momma” instead of her person.

But Kunis has had enough. She boldly declared: “From this point forward, when I am confronted with one of these comments, subtle or overt, I will address them head on.”

Let ‘em know, Mila!

Taylor Swift details sexual assault by local radio DJ

The details of the ongoing legal battle between Taylor Swift and a former Denver radio DJ David Mueller have been released in a deposition obtained by TMZ. To catch you up, Mueller sued Taylor Swift for slander after he lost his job over accusations that he inappropriately groped the superstar in 2013. Swift fired back with a lawsuit of her own for battery and sexual assault.

The “Shake It Off” singer provided an emotional testimony in July where she described the incident, stating, “He reached up under my skirt and grabbed my ass right when I was having to pose for a photo, and it felt intentional that would be the time he would choose to do it.”

The photo in question, which may or may not document the moment Mueller allegedly groped her, has been sealed by a judge per Swift’s request. She claims she was “shocked and withdrawn” after the incident.

Needless to say, there is a ton of bad blood between these two. But we’re riding with Taylor on this one.

Prince Harry and ‘Suits’ star Meghan Markle are seriously dating

With all of the fairy tales suggesting royal balls and quests to slay dragons as the official courting rituals of princes, it’s almost hard to picture what it might be like to date one in 2016. Imagine Prince Harry’s Tinder profile: 32, 6’2. Enjoys polo and rugby. Family first.

Luckily for 35-year-old “Suits” actress Meghan Markle, she doesn’t have to imagine, and she certainly didn’t have to swipe right. She and Prince Harry are a thing and it looks like their relationship is getting pretty serious. According to US Weekly, the 32-year-old Prince of Wales secretly flew to Toronto on Friday to spend a few days with his new lady love. The couple reportedly met through mutual friends and have been dating for the past few months. Daily Mail reports that Markle feels like “the luckiest girl in the world.”

Keeping light in the face of war

Luke Bracey says director Mel Gibson knew how to keep the humor while making "Hacksaw Ridge."

GREG CWIK
@MetroNewYork
letters@metro.us

In "Hacksaw Ridge," Mel Gibson's first film in a decade, Luke Bracey plays an easily agitated, not very accepting World War II soldier who, along with his cadre of similarly closed-minded grunts, decries Desmond Doss' (Andrew Garfield) pacifism as cowardice. By the end of the film, Bracey's soldier, having witnessed Doss' courage under fire (he saves the lives of 75 men at Okinawa), has a change of heart, and they bond in a dirt trench over cans of processed meat — in between some of the most realistically violent battle scenes ever committed to film.

Bracey, last seen in the Keanu Reeves role in the "Point Break" remake, talks to us about keeping things real and how Gibson is still, after all that's happened, a funny guy.

So, "Hacksaw Ridge" is insanely violent.

Yes, but that is what war is. We screened the film for a number of veterans, and last week in New Orleans some of them happened to have been at Hacksaw Ridge, and one of them was Drew Brees' grandfather — you know, the quarterback for the Saints. As awful as it is, it's kind of humbling to hear these veterans say that the battle scenes are the most realistic depiction of war they've seen. To realize that's what real-life horror is. I'm a history buff and so is Mel, so the movie had to be realistic.

Mel Gibson has a reputation for joking around on set.

Yes, Mel is the funniest guy. He's always telling jokes between takes. We didn't have time or a huge budget for jokes, but he'd come up to you between takes. You think he's going to give you some direction, but he just tells you a joke and you start laughing. It's who he is, and it adds life to the shoot. It's actually a very funny film, and not just Vince Vaughn, who's one of the funniest people alive. It's that juxtaposition between the serious side of the film and the funny side. You gotta have the light and the dark.

What kind of jokes?

I don't remember. Like, he would impersonate people. He's got a rubber voice. He would pretend to be Spanish or something, whatever. He's so transformative. He would be getting interviewed by a Spanish interviewer and he would talk to them in a Spanish accent.

Mel is a pretty controversial guy, but on your last film you worked with someone who might be even more controversial: young star screenwriter Max Landis.

Yeah, Max is a great guy. He's so smart. He's high-energy and he's got so much going on up there. He has an encyclopedic knowledge of superheroes. We had a good time. Clever dude. His love of stories is wonderful.

Laugh Boston

The home of "Trump Takes on Boston" (the mock debate you know you can win) will open their dance floor on election night for an evening of live music and election coverage — the remix that could very well save your sanity. We're also told "unwanted" cameos by prime instigator "Billy Bush" and "Scott Baio" will happen at some point during the night, too. $10, 10 p.m.-1 a.m. 425 Summer St., South Boston, laughboston.com

Back Bay Social Club

The Back Bay bar will broadcast the results on their big screens with food and signature cocktails specials all night. Guests can imbibe starting at 6 p.m. and soothe their sorrows and anxieties with the likes of crispy pretzel-crusted chicken croquettes and taco-stuffed avocados. Starting at 6 p.m., 857 Boylston St., Boston, backbaysocialclub.com

Ester

Wear your "I Voted" sticker to this Dot Avenue bar for discounts on cocktails and snacks. Ester will serve a "liberal" pour of wine (or beer, if you must) and a "conservatively" comforting meal for $20.16 to anyone who walks in after doing their patriotic duty. Warm cookies for those still wearing their stickers. 11 a.m.-10 p.m., 2261 Dorchester Ave., Dorchester, ester-dot.com

River Bar

There will be a grand parade of absinthe on tap at this Assembly Row establishment. Pick a pour of liquid courage with Herbsaint, Prado Pastis, Pastis Henri Bardouin, St. George Absinthe Verte and Vieux Carre Absinthe Superieure available for your green fairy-aided acceptance of the night's results. 4-11:30 p.m., 661 Assembly Row, Somerville, river-bar.com

Bukowski Tavern

The Inman Square location will bring back Trump's Little Fingers (buffalo chicken fingers dusted with maple) and Clinton's E-mail Server special (Crooked Tree IPA-battered onion rings) for one last night as the election results roll in. Also, Chef Brian Poe will pay tribute to everyone's favorite-ish undecided voter, Ken Bone, with a bone marrow and toast point special. 4-11:30 p.m., 1281 Cambridge St., Cambridge, bukowskitavern.net/cambridge-2

Meaghan Sinclair and Harmony Dawn of Boozie Époque know their cocktails. The locally based duo create custom cocktails and share their deep-rooted bartending knowledge for industry and private events and bars across New England. Needless to say, Sinclair and Dawn, both 36, were quick to whip up an impressive list of spots to nosh and knock back a cocktail or two. They share their favorites here.

Go-to date spot?

Dawn: Yong Yong in Malden — a killer sushi and hotpot spot — has hosted my beau and I many times. 108 Ferry St., Malden, yongyongmalden.com
Sinclair: Cafe Sushi, traditional and creative sushi, beautiful, delicate preparation. 1105 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, cafesushicambridge.com

Most Instagrammable dish in town?

Dawn: The molten avocado or shaksuka with any of the picture perfect cocktails at Opus in Salem. This bar has a super-fun vibe, yellow light-up bar, and everything on their cocktail/food menu is both on-trend and stunning. They also have tiny place-setting cards for their cocktails! Super cute! 87 Washington St., Salem, saalemopus.com

Sinclair: Smoked & salted peel & eat shrimp with an absinthe cocktail from Waypoint. 1030 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, waypointharvard.com

Best meal under $5?

Dawn: Gotta hand it to my neighborhood pub, Hugh O'Neill's, for their $5 offerings during happy hour. Corn and leek fritters with creamy chili lime sauce. 45 Pleasant St., Malden, hughoneills.com
Sinclair: I'm counting this as a meal because it definitely has been, Toscanini's Ice Cream. 899 Main St., Cambridge, tosci.com

Best hidden foodie gem?

Dawn: Rossetti's in Lynn! This place has superstar Joel Atlas behind the bar serving barrel-aged cocktails, tiki magic and off-the-cuff offerings paired with some of the best Italian food I've tasted ever. 47 Sutton St. Lynn, rossettirestaurant.com

Sinclair: Gotta give it up for Mary Chung in Central Square. 464 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, marychung.com

Best place to catch up with friends?

Dawn: This is a toss up between Brass Union — with their game room and awesome weekly events, and Casa B — with its intimate setting and made-for-sharing tiny plates. 70 Union Square, Somerville, brassunion.com; 253 Washington St., Somerville, casabrestaurant.com
Sinclair: Mamaleh's, milkshakes forever. One Kendall Square, 15 Hampshire St., Cambridge, mamalehs.com

Best late night meal?

Dawn: The Independent has been a safe haven for grass-fed burgers and oysters many times. Not sure what I'd do without them! 75 Union Square, Somerville, theindo.com Sinclair: Eastern Standard, they even held it down during the big snowstorms a couple of years ago. Life savers. 528 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, easternstandardboston.com

YOUR WEEKEND STARTS NOW

MUSIC

Beethoven: "Missa Solemnis"

Beethoven remains the composer who best represents classical music itself in the popular imagination, not least due to his pure emotional force, which is well in display in this, his most ambitious work, which took five years to complete. It's performed here by Chorus pro Musica, who tell us: "It expresses, on a grand scale, his deepest and most personal spirituality."

Hassle Fest

The Boston Hassle throws its eighth annual festival this weekend, with a visual art installation made from repurposed materials and performances from more than 30 bands, including electronic-music pioneers Silver Apples, eccentric soul singer Willis Earl Beale and the postindustrial heaviness of Detroit's Wolf Eyes, plus local favorites like the Monsieus and Guerilla Toss. Pro tip: Come early, advance tickets are already sold out!

ART

"Mark de Paola: 60 Seconds"

Leica Gallery features this fashion photographer and TV ad director with an impressively long CV, working for everyone from Donna Karan to Kawasaki. Here, however, he's concerned with pure art, presenting a series of 60-second exposures of female nudes. The blurry but tantalizing result is kind of like watching every frame of a video at once — motion seen from the vantage point of eternity.

Through Jan. 2
Leica Gallery Boston
74 Arlington St.
Free, leicagalleryboston.com

"Stephen St. Francis Decky: Dognamé, Strawbaby and Filbert"

Stephen St. Francis Decky's cute, brightly colored works, consisting of paintings, sculptures and digital media, have the guileless quality of children's book illustrations or an unaired Saturday morning cartoon, with recurring characters and a world all its own. Despite occasional hints of adult experience, the innocence communicated in these works remains uncorrupted, and all the more strange for it.

THEATER

"Warrior Class"

This play by Kenneth Lin, writer on "House of Cards", tells the story of a New York assemblyman with political ambitions, described by others in the play as the Republican Obama. But a potential scandal arises when an old college classmate appears with some unfaltering memories. What's our hero willing to do to make sure he isn't derailed?

Through Nov. 13
Lyric Stage, 140 Clarendon St.
$33-$69, lyricstage.com

BOOKS

E.J. Barnes

This author will discuss the early New Englander Thomas Morton, leader of a settlement in present-day Quincy that was considerably more libertine than its Puritan neighbors—they even allowed dancing! Naturally, this caused much consternation, but what didn't with that crowd? Barnes produced a comic book story on Morton for the 2014 anthology "Colonial Comics: New England 1620-1750".

MOVIES

"Story of Judas"

Filmmaker Rabah Ameur-Zaimche appears in person at this screening of his 2015 film "Story of Judas" which imagines the Gospel narrative from Judas' perspective, portraying him not as the betrayer of Jesus' teaching but as its most radical proponent. At the heart are questions relevant to any ideological movement, especially the age-old tension between dogma and free thought.

COMEDY

Ben Gleib

Ben Gleib covers typical topics—a set of videos online finds him questioning the taboo against men ordering "girly" cocktails, weird pharmaceutical ads and the myth that we swallow bugs in our sleep. It might sound generic, but it's not, because Gleib is the rare sort of comic who's just funny to watch talking, whatever he's discussing—the more unremarkable the better.

"Tiger Style!"

Huntington Theatre has extended its run of this comedy by Mike Lew, originally set to end on Nov. 13. It's about a pair of Asian-American siblings whose precocious childhoods have led to adult frustration and parental disapproval. In protest of stereotypes and family expectations, they create the Asian Freedom Tour, which leads them, eventually, to China. But what will they find there?

BURLINGTON MALL

Momofuku Ando Instant Ramen Museum GETTY IMAGES

Momofuku Ando Instant Ramen Museum

In 1958 Momofuku Ando invented the first instant noodles, which he called Chicken Ramen, after a year of researching and tinkering in a shed in his backyard. Today about 100 billion bowls are eaten every year worldwide. This museum in Osaka, Japan, is not only a monument to the noodle and the man, but also to the spirit of invention. You'll also go get hands-on with experiences like the My Cup Noodles factory, where you can design your own packaging and flavors.

Never too niche

These little museums of oddities reveal our curious nature.

Fodor's Travel

Bigfoot Discovery Project

In 1967, Roger Patterson and Bob Gimlin recorded what they claimed was a female Sasquatch running through the forests of Oregon. It is the definitive evidence for Bigfoot enthusiasts, so of course an exhibit on the film is a focus of the Bigfoot Museum in Felton, California. Alongside local tales and memorabilia like matchbooks and toys, you'll also find plaster foot and handprints, and what is allegedly dried droppings from the beast.

Cancun Underwater Museum

Making a case for how cool it would be to live underwater, the Museo Subacuatico de Arte is the largest man-made underwater attraction in the world, consisting of more than 400 sculptures. Erected in 2009 with works by English sculptor Jason deCaires Taylor, the Mexican museum is more than just a cool attraction; it also promotes reef conservation. And you don't have to have a scuba license to witness eerie splendor — glass-bottom boats and snorkeling will also get you close to the site.

Museum of Bad Art

Art is subjective, sure, but this community-run museum cherishes all the (mal)forms, displaying it across three locations in Massachusetts — two fittingly outside of theater bathrooms. The inaugural piece, "Lucy in the Sky with Flowers," was discovered in the garbage. You can also see the collection online, meticulously detailed with descriptions and helpfully sorted into categories like portraiture, landscape, "noods" (nudes) and the more obscure "blue people."

Spam Museum

"Please don't eat the exhibits" reads a sign at this museum dedicated to the 8-decade-old all-American lunch meat Spam, which itself either represents "Spiced Ham" or "Shoulder of Pork and Ham." Found in Austin, Minnesota, home to the Spam factory, the 14,000-square-foot museum houses Spam memorabilia and explores its role in culture, including Spam's role in the military during World War II.

International Spy Museum

Although it may sound like a destination for conspiracy theorists, the International Spy Museum in Washington, D.C., deals in fact: the history of intelligence and espionage as told through individual stories, artifacts and, should you choose to accept your mission, interactive exhibits. Of course, as the exciting world of spydom has captured the public imagination, fictional stories are highlighted as well, like an exhibit of Bond villains.

Salt and Pepper Shaker Museum

With over 20,000 sets of salt and pepper shakers, this museum near Gatlinburg, Tennessee, is a tribute to how these common spices have helped shape our tableware. See everything from pop culture examples like the mop-topped Beatles shakers to presidential memorabilia, like the remarkably detailed shaker depicting JFK on his rocker. Many of them are also for sale in the museum's gift shop.

Sulabh International Museum of Toilets

At this New Delhi museum, located in the largest sanitation and social welfare NGO in India, what you'll find is a thoughtful chronicle of how humans have dealt with sanitation throughout history. Divided into three eras — ancient, medieval and modern — you'll find chamber pots from ancient Greece, decorative Austrian urinals, bedpans, bidets and a replica of the other throne used by King Louis XIV.

ANOTHER MESSAGE SENT BY BELICHICK

OPINION

"The Danny Picard Show" airs every weekday at DannyPicard.com. Danny can also be heard on WEEI 93.7 FM. @dannypicard

Whenever the New England Patriots make a crazy move, I always come back to the Randy Moss trade in 2010.

Moss spent three-plus seasons in New England. He was a beast. Took the top off opposing defenses like nobody else. His connection with Tom Brady was as good as you'll ever see in the NFL.

Next thing you know, he was traded to Minnesota for a third-round pick.

I covered the Patriots for Comcast SportsNet at that time. In my years as a beat writer, I only asked a question if I was genuinely interested in the answer. That made for very little question-asking when I was in the Patriots' locker room, because, well, you know how it goes in there. I could have guessed the answer to every question asked at Gillette. That's not a complaint. That's just an acknowledgement of how it goes in Foxboro under Bill Belichick.

In Bill Belichick's world, no one player is bigger than the Patriot Way. GETTY IMAGES

In the days following the Moss trade, however, I had a question I needed answered. So I asked Wes Welker, straight up, "What does trading Randy Moss say to you? What type of message does that send to the team?"

Welker said, "Umm ..." and paused for a few seconds, which felt like a minute.

"There's a sign on the wall when you walk in here," he said to me. "It says, 'If you don't want to be here, you don't have to be.'"

That wasn't a shot at Moss. He was just answering the question. He was giving me a glimpse of what went on under the hoodie, and what it was like to play by Belichick's rules, whatever those rules may be.

Moss didn't want to be in New England under the Patriots' terms. He made that loud and clear with some postgame comments about his contract at the beginning of that season. And Welker's response to my question summed it all up perfectly. That's just how it goes in New England.

At the end of the day, it's a business. And sometimes, it's not a fun business. We saw that once again this week, as the Patriots traded 27-year-old Pro Bowl linebacker Jamie Collins to the Cleveland Browns for a third-round compensatory draft pick.

The move comes as the Pats enter their bye week with a 7-1 record. If the playoffs began after Week 8, the Patriots would be the No. 1 seed in the AFC and the road to the Super Bowl would go through New England.

By simply looking at that, the Collins trade comes as quite a shock, not just in these parts, but throughout the entire NFL.

Why now? And why to Cleveland? In fact, why trade Collins at all?

The wild speculation has already begun. We have reports of Collins asking for "Von Miller money" when his rookie contract expires after this season. There are others knocking his on-field style, calling him a "freelancer." And there is some hinting that perhaps something happened "in-house," which forced Belichick's hand.

Perhaps it was all of those things, and then some. At least we know what it wasn't. It wasn't a football move. Because a football move wouldn't be to trade an athletic linebacker like Collins during the season when you're a favorite to win the Super Bowl.

Regardless of what type of "off-field" or "in-house" issue it was, there's really only one reason Collins was traded. Once there are issues, Belichick sends messages.

Sending Collins to the 0-8 Browns is just that. It's a message to his team, this year and beyond, much like the message that Welker mentioned to me six years ago: If you don't want to be here — on Belichick's terms — you don't have to be.

And as much as I enjoyed watching Collins play, it's tough to argue with Belichick's success, as he seems destined for his sixth straight AFC Championship Game. To think that these Patriots will be completely thrown off course because of one linebacker trade is a little ridiculous.

Knock him all you want, but Belichick has spent years creating the organization's identity, and it's worked. Nobody is bigger than the Patriot Way.

Collins is just the latest example.
